States With Big Electoral Votes.

BY N. O. MESSENGER.

CHICAGO, October 6 .- Slowly but steadily and surely the republican prospects are growing more stable very day in the important statesthose which hold the commanding figures in the electoral college-according to the judgment of republican managers and leaders. That conviction is based upon reports received from actual observations made under the efficient organization of the repubicans in the several commonwealths. their claims the best founded in the states where the electoral vote is largest, and the total of which constitutes a majority of the electoral college. The democrats are depending lege. The democrats are depending upon an undercurrent of popular sentiment, the republicans upon the "form" of the states hitherto dependable. The most gratifying and, to the managers the most significant, pointer in the campaign is the improvement in actual conditions in Indiana. Four weeks ago hardly any side line observer would have counted Indiana as anything but democratic, with the possible exception of one republican United States senatorship. Today reports of conditions in Indiana cause the republicans to be confident of carrying the state for Hughes and electing both United States senators and the state ticket, besides gaining several representatives in Congress.

This change is attributed in part to organization and in part to crystallization of the sentiment among business men, farmers and manufacturers in favor of the republican party, national and state, over the democratic party, its theories and administration. The organization in Indiana is said to be efficient to a degree and comprehensive in detail. It extends to every precinct and every manager in the state is "on his toes" down to the last precinct lieutenant. upon an undercurrent of popular senti

RAILWAY BEGINS REMOVING POLES

OF BRITISH DRIVE Leaders Confident of Victory in Ones That Are the Greatest Menace on Bladensburg Road Being Shifted.

REVIEW OF THE SITUATION CITIZENS PREPARE TO ACT

Electric Company today voluntarily started removing some of the trolley poles that are a menace to the heavy motor travel along the Bladensburg road and making plans for placing red lights at dangerous points, an official of the Washington Safety First Asso ciation and several citizens' associa tions representing the territory near this thoroughfare prepared to urge moval of the poles from the highway in the interests of public safety.

Railway Will Request Conference to Arrange Disposition of the Poles

Determined to do all within its power to minimize the danger of the existence of trolley poles in Bladensburg road and not wait for an investigation of the situation or an order from District authorities, the Washington Railway and Electric Company this afternoon sent an emergency wagon out Bladens burg road with instructions to remove poles located at the most dangerous points.

The places which will be given immediate attention are where the road crosses the car tracks at the District line and 28th street, where an automobile accident early Tuesday morning resulted in the death of William M. Schaffer.

to be immediately done.

The probability is that two poles will have to be removed at the District line, which is considered by officials of the company as the most dangerous point. At this intersection and at 28th street the company may install red lights as an extra warning to automobilists and other users of the road.

One plan under consideration is to seek permission from the telephone company to use its poles along the curb line for eye bolts in order that span wires may be installed at the dangerous points, thereby eliminating some of the car line poles that are said to menace traffic.
